ROYAL FESTIVAL HALL

A nighttime photograph of the Royal Festival Hall in London. The building's most prominent feature is its large, white, arched roof, which is illuminated from below. The words "ROYAL FESTIVAL HALL" are written in blue neon letters across the front of the arch. Below the arch, a long, horizontal glass window is brightly lit from within, showing a warm, yellowish glow. The lower part of the building is also lit up, with various windows and entrances visible. In the foreground, there are dark silhouettes of trees and streetlights, and a few blurred lights from other buildings or vehicles. The overall scene is a vibrant display of architectural lighting at night.
